Marvelous!

A friend of ours, visiting the city a few days ago, after 10 years absence, was, to use his own words, "thunder-struck at the marvelous growth of the city and the street car service." Says he—"when I left here it was a country city—now it is certainly a metropolitan city."

IN WHICH TO SPEND AN AFTERNOON PLEASANTLY AND PROFITABLY.

It is one of the most astonishing things that there are people who have lived within a stone's throw of Yale and yet have never had the glimmering of a desire to see other than the outside of this institution.

Into the inner precincts of the university the great majority of people cannot enter, but such buildings as Peabody Museum, the gymnasium, the Yale School of Fine Arts, and others, are thrown open some on certain days, others any time and all times between the hours of 8 a. m. and 5 p. m.

Such a one is the Yale School of Fine Arts. For the small sum of twenty-five cents a person may be admitted to the Art school, spend a morning or an afternoon pleasantly and profitably examining the treasures of ancient and modern art with which this school is so well equipped. One of the finest collections of plaster casts of masterpieces is seen here, and one is not obliged to go to New York, the Mecca of New Haveners, to see a perfect model of the Laocoon, or of the Venus of Melos, or others equally noted. It is another case of the old saying, "Familiarity breeds contempt." A person says in answer to a question, "Have I been into the Art school lately?" "No! They are all fossilized there." If by keeping up with the times and providing an equipment, often not owned by larger schools they are fossilized, then let us have more of that kind here in New Haven—but "cheer up, son, you're right."

Among the paintings the Jarves gallery of Italian art is worthy of note. Here again the aristocrat or plutocrat is inclined to become tipsy. "Because those horrid old pictures are perfectly ridiculous; where is the drawing or the coloring, I should like to know! They are perfect caricatures." When these same people think that those "horrid pictures" represent a pictorial bible, and there was no other for the mass of people at the time when these pictures were painted, perhaps their noses will come down to the normal condition.

Among the modern paintings is one which has recently been added to the collection called "The Wise and Foolish Virgins," by Franz Von Pilot. This picture is Oriental in design and coloring, and alone is well worth the price of admission. Prof. John F. Wells's "Forging the Shaft" is a picture well known to the art loving world, is in the gallery. The Trumbull collection of miniatures and colonial pictures is exquisite. Two of his pictures are "Washington Resigning His Commission" and "Washington Signing the Declaration of Independence," have been copied heretofore, and the copies placed in the capitol at Washington.

Very few people know that the remains of the artist and patriot, together with those of his wife, lie under the Art school, and whose memory is commemorated by two tablets, one in the basement wall of the school inside and the other in the outer wall.

For the lover of the bruised (black and blue) with the usual accompaniment of yellow and swollen skin, the painting, there are one or two examples as rainbowy as one could desire.

In the cabinets of a room near the entrance is S. Wells Williams' collection of Japanese bronzes and porcelains, well worth the visitor's close attention. Another room is devoted to the Alden wood carvings, confessionals of the fifteenth century, from Ghent, Belgium. From the first of June until the middle of September, the work of the students of the school is on exhibition in three of the rooms on the first floor. Let us try to enjoy and profit by the pleasures which come within our reach even at our very doors.

FUNERAL OF ELI WHITNEY.

A Large Attendance of the City's Most Honored People—President Dwight Officials—Simple and Impressive Services.

The funeral of Eli Whitney was held from his late residence, No. 29 Elm street, yesterday afternoon. In the absence of Rev. Dr. Smyth, pastor of Center church, who is away, President Dwight of Yale conducted the services. The service was very short and simple, but deeply impressive. President Dwight read from the Scriptures and offered prayer.

A quartet composed of Prof. and Mrs. Bonney, Mr. R. S. Shepard, Miss Daniker, sang "Jesus Lover of My Soul" and "Lead Kindly Light Through the Encircling Gloom." The funeral arrangements were in charge of Prof. Henry W. Farnam.

The pallbearers were Prof. James M. Hoppin, Dean Francis Wayland, ex-Governor Charles R. Ingersoll, Hon. S. E. Baldwin, Dr. David Daggett and A. L. Chamberlain.

The interment was in the family lot in Grove street cemetery.

The funeral was very largely attended, despite the absence of so many prominent people from the city. Others beside the immediate relatives who were at the funeral were Dr. and Mrs. Bushnell, Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. Blake, the Misses Edwards, Rev. Chauncey Brewster of New York, Dr. Carmalt and William Johnson of Mamaroneck, Prof. M. F. Tyler, ex-Mayor Sargent, Prof. G. D. Watrous, Attorney Talcott, Prof. Russell, Hon. J. M. Townsend, Rev. Dr. Harwood, Dr. B. H. Cheney, City Clerk Lyon, Attorney J. T. Moran, Tredwell Ketcham, ex-City Clerk J. B. Martin, Judge Joseph Sheldon, George Hotchkiss, President S. A. Galpin of the New Haven Clock company, D. Goffe Phipps, ex-Secretary M. Zunder, ex-Governor Morris, General S. E. Merwin, ex-Alderman A. M. Hiller, Charles E. Graves, ex-City Engineer A. B. Hill, R. M. Everitt, ex-Governor Ingersoll, ex-Adjutant General C. M. Ingersoll, Prof. Brewer, President Curtis of the City bank, Prof. Hoppin of Yale and many others.

The interment was in the family lot in the Grove street cemetery. President Dwight officiated also at the grave.

VALKYRIE A SURPRISE.

Appearance of the Hull on Dry Dock—Points in Which She Differs From Defender.

New York, Aug. 21.—Valkyrie III, was taken out of the water to-day at the Erie Basin in the presence of about 1,000 yachtsmen, designers, curiosity-seekers, and others. The visitors came and went during the day, and it was evident that there was more interest in the latest candidate for the America's cup honors than in any previous cup-challenger. She was in remarkably good condition after her long sail, no barnacles being on her body anywhere, and while her seams about the bow were started a little, there was no such opening of seams as was seen about the stern of Valkyrie II, when she arrived at this port. H. Maitland Kersey, Lord Dunraven's representative in this country, was present to watch the docking, and to see that no harm befell the craft, for which he is responsible until the owner arrives.

It was about 6 o'clock this morning when Valkyrie III was warped into the dock and taken far up to the front where Vigilant lay when last out. Then the big pumps were started and the water crept slowly away from her hull until at 10 o'clock she was high and dry. Mr. Kersey said that he was very well satisfied with her condition; as far as he could see she had not been strained at all on her voyage across the Atlantic. He said she would not be coppered, but would be painted with a patent composition after being thoroughly cleaned. It is expected that she will be floated before Monday, and as soon as the sails can be bent she will take her first trial. This will give her eleven sailing days before the race which is to take place on September 7.

Valkyrie III. was a decided surprise to those who were at the dock to look at her. They had been led to expect a very different type of boat. Looking at her in the water, the power was evident, but below the water-line it is much more noticeable. Viewed from amidships on the shore she resembles Defender in a general way. She is cut away forward to about the same degree and has the same big overhang aft, but there the resemblance ceases. From the forward point of the load-water line her bottom slopes away more gradually, and underneath the mast she has a good bit more draught than Defender. The curve from that point to the foremast is not as sharp as Defender's, and the keel is of entirely different shape. In Defender the keel is rocker-shaped, with the greatest draught in the middle, while the keel of Valkyrie III. runs back at an easy incline to the stern post where the draught is greatest. There the yacht resembles Defender with the great overhang and the powerful rudder.

When the yacht is viewed from the bow and stern, there is little or no resemblance to Defender. The American yacht looks like a round-bottomed canoe, with a fixed center-board and a bulb keel. Valkyrie III. is a keel boat pure and simple with no bulb keel, no round bottom, and nothing resembling the Herschell model. At the bow she has a graceful curve to the harpins, where the curve from amidships meets it. The entrance to the water is excellent and not the slightest sign can be seen of a hollow bow which will hold the water, or of a bulging shoulder to drag water along. The broad beam is noticeable on deck, but not so much below. The lines aft are just as graceful as those forward, and it looks as if her exit from the water would be fully as good as her entrance. The bilge is carried well down, much more so than in Defender, and the curve to the keel is gradual. The depth of hold is not so great as with her predecessors, although she has an increased draught, and her under body is trifle like Vigilant's, with the lines extended to make a boat of twenty feet draught. The last eight feet of draught consists of about three feet of lead keel which is coppered, while the other five feet of the boat is about three feet in thickness, beginning to flare out to form the body of the yacht about eight feet from the lowest point. Her great power is evident from the beam and depth, while the heavy lead keel and the low bilge give her ability to carry a great amount of sail.

The spars are all in place with the exception of the topmast. Her galvanized steel boom, which will accommodate an immense sail, was hoisted with much interest to-day. It looks light, but is evidently strong. It extends very far outboard. The general effect upon the observer is of a boat with somewhat less load waterline length than Defender, but with bigger spars.

You Can't Do Better.

The intelligent compositor and the lynx-eyed proofreader will, notwithstanding their customary vigilance, permit an erroneous statement to materialize and "raise Ned" when it appears in "cold type." We were reminded of that fact yesterday as we looked at the advertisement of Brown & Durham, the well known house furnishers. Said advertisement was headed as follows: "5 Reasons why it will pay you to trade with us." It then stated—"1st, you want to do better." Now, this is very true in a certain sense, for many indiscriminate purchasers who have not acquired themselves of the bargains to be found at Brown & Durham's, but have "paid big money for inferior goods," certainly need as well as want to do better. But the advertisement, as plainly written in the copy, read in this wise: "1st, you can't do better." We make the correction with pleasure, as we in common "with the rest of the people" know of the honesty and reliability of this well known and successful business house.
